The Park covers 58,300 ha, and falls within four departments or provinces: Caldas, Risaralda, Quindío and Tolima.

The park contains an amazing natural reserve, which provides water to 37 municipalities, and is home to innumerable species of flora and fauna.

The park looks today much as it did over 2 million years ago, mostly influenced by the Nevado del Ruiz, the oldest volcano in the Park, at the northern end, at an altitude of 5,321 m.

The Nevados Nature Park has looked the same for the last 2 million years.

In the center, there is the Santa Isabel, another snow-capped mountain, 4,963 m high, and to the south, the Tolima at 5,215 m, which is a much more difficult climb.

Within the Park there are the paramillos of Quindío, Cisne and Santa Rosa, which were once snow-capped, until about 60 years ago, when little by little they lost their ice-caps. They are known as paramillos, because they are in the páramo, but not higher than 4,300 m.
